The Lord Mayor’s Appeal
2018 - 2019 - 2020
Helping 1 million people thrive.
#peoplematter
We are very proud to have been working alongside our three special partners to deliver change in creating an Inclusive, Healthy, Skilled and Fair City. Place2Be have launched their Mental Health Champions programme in schools, OnSide Youth Zones will be opening their doors at three sites early next year, and Samaritans’ Wellbeing in the City programme has been launched and is successfully rolling out in companies.

William Russell
Senior Alderman Below the Chair

We would not be able to achieve our aims without you and in particular our corporate partners.

As I can say from experience, the convening power of the Lord Mayor is impressive, and linked with the collaboration and backing of City businesses and the skill of our charity partners, it will enable us to continue to achieve our common ambition to help one million people thrive and create A Better City for All.

Charles Bowman
Alderman and Former Lord Mayor

I am delighted to continue to work with my colleagues Aldermen William Russell and Charles Bowman to have a transformational impact on people’s lives by bringing together businesses, employees, neighbouring communities and charities to find solutions to some of London’s most pressing societal issues.

As you will see from the following pages, and the case studies in particular, our work has already succeeded in having a huge impact, both through the thought leadership initiatives and the ground breaking projects which we are supporting through our charity partners.

We have enabled collaboration across the City providing companies with the tools and initiatives to tackle specific challenges such as diversity and inclusion, as well as showcased successful implementation of initiatives within companies which address all our pillars.

Our leading City-wide campaigns have now reached further afield with This is Me launched in the North West and Scotland.

We have plenty more to do and will continue to be ambitious. We look forward to working with each of you to continue to make a transformational impact on our City not only now, but far into the future.

Alderman Peter Estlin
The Rt Hon The Lord Mayor of the City of London
Our Strategy

The Lord Mayor’s Appeal multi-year strategy works on four key pillars, to create a City that is Inclusive, Healthy, Skilled and Fair.

The Power of Diversity series breaks down barriers to inclusion by empowering organisations to collaborate on creating inclusive workplace cultures, providing the tools and learning to tackle the challenges of diverse representation.

Addressing issues such as gender, disability inclusive leadership and untapped talent, Power of Diversity is making a huge impact on the professional culture of the City, providing a forum to showcase initiatives which become the blueprint to creating fully inclusive workplaces and equal opportunities for all.

A pioneering mental health campaign, which aims to reduce the stigma of mental health, dispel the myths around mental health in the workplace and raise awareness of wellbeing.

With commitment to changing attitudes towards mental health, collaborate with organisations to build inclusive cultures, reduce stigma, dispel myths and improve employee wellbeing for good.

She Can Be..., is one unique day in which young women and the City collaborate to inspire future talent.

Born of the statistic that 64% of 17–21 year old females believe that, all being equal, employers prefer to hire a man over a woman (Girlguiding Girls’ Attitudes Survey, 2016), She Can Be... aims to change the perceptions of young women and City organisations alike, by providing a platform for participants to challenge companies and identify what needs to change.

City Giving Day is one day in the year when businesses can unite to celebrate and showcase their charitable and volunteering achievements with employees, clients, suppliers and the public.

We will continue to develop our four existing thought leadership initiatives under the four pillars: Power of Diversity, This is Me, She Can Be... and City Giving Day.

We are delivering groundbreaking programmes with our three charity partners, Place2Be, OnSide Youth Zones and Samaritans.

Our work will benefit two communities, City employees, residents and their families and friends, as well as those who live and work in our neighbouring communities.

We have one aim: A Better City for All
Helping 1 million people thrive.
When carrying out public policy, it is important to understand the impact those policies are having on society.

For example, at the Bank of England when making decisions about monetary and financial policies, we base those decisions on the impact they will have on the economy, the financial system and ultimately wider society.

In principle, the same should be true when it comes to the policies and practices of charities. These policies are most likely to be effective when their impact on society can be assessed and evaluated, objectively and rigorously. This is standard practice in parts of the charitable sector, but by no means all.

The Lord Mayor’s Appeal does fantastic work to support people and communities. It is celebrating the first year of its strategic commitment to create A Better City for All.

Building a City that is inclusive and open to everyone

London is a place of big dreams and abundant opportunities. However, many groups of people face significant barriers in getting a job in City businesses, and those who do find a job face obstacles to their career progression and general wellbeing.

Research shows that people from affluent backgrounds occupy a disproportionate number of the top jobs and that employers favour candidates who were educated at private schools and elite universities.

For those recruited, non-inclusive working practices may disadvantage women, people from ethnic minorities, people with a disability, those who identify as LGBTQ+ and people from lower socio-economic backgrounds.

The City has made good progress over the last few years, however there is more to be done.

Senior leaders have recognised the commercial and societal rewards of driving for more inclusivity and this initiative provides them with a platform for increased growth in that direction.

In 2018 our events included: BAME leaders of tomorrow, Social Mobility - finding untapped talent, and Gender - enabling women to succeed.

In 2019 we will carry on tackling the most pressing and difficult issues by experimenting with event formats, refocusing the Senior Leadership Forum, and with a new name to better reflect the conversations happening in the City today – Power of Inclusion.

Inclusive workplaces are more productive, more commercially successful, have a better understanding of their customers, and have a happier more engaged workforce.

Each one of our 6 Power of Diversity events is attended by the Lord Mayor and focuses on a particular area of need identified as a priority by our members.

We use our networks in the City and beyond to find organisations and senior leaders who have tried and tested something that’s made a real tangible difference.

Through membership of the Power of Diversity series, member organisations collaborate for change, hear about innovative programmes that are already proven to be successful, and share lessons learned.

Members can use this space to expand their network and deepen existing contacts within the diversity and inclusion sphere to collaborate on doing more, more effectively.

All the different sectors show up in the room and offer ideas, exchange best practices and understand what the burning platforms are. It makes it easier for us to go back and make a difference.

Vondo became a Marketing Trainee at Invesco at the age of 18. Coming from a council estate outside of London having arrived in the UK with his parents as a toddler, it wasn’t an obvious choice.

For his peers, the City is viewed as having few career prospects, no room for elevation, and no potential for financial prosperity. He was supported by Investment 2020 with the skills and networks to apply for roles after successfully completing his A-Levels. Dialogue and mentoring has enabled him to succeed and he is now in a full-time role.

Having Vondo as part of the team at Invesco has furthered a culture focused on diversity of thought and enabled them to shape their business for a more inclusive workforce. This inspires the collegial culture and decision-making ethos that makes them more robust and representative of the world they live and work in.

As a speaker at the Power of Diversity Breakfast Vondo has had a platform from which he can discuss what is important to young people and speak to senior leaders whom he would never have even considered meeting before.

It is this success that he wishes to share with his peers to encourage them to strive for more and to challenge organisations to do more to open their doors to extremely talented and ambitious young people like himself.

Opportunities are tangible, realistic and attainable.

Leah’s Story

Four years ago, it looked likely that Leah would be leaving school with no qualifications. She grew up on a council estate in Bermondsey where drug use was the norm.

Many of her peers turned to serious crime to fund their drug addictions and many ended up serving prison sentences. Living in this disruptive environment was inevitably very tough for Leah and resulted in behavioural issues which, on top of her struggles with dyslexia, led to her being excluded from school multiple times.

Leah saw first-hand how directionless young people felt in her area, with nowhere to discover what their talents might be and explore their potential.

Through having a place to go and people to speak to at OnSide Youth Zones, she has grown in confidence, become skilled and is on a path to a bright future.

Leah has also begun an internship as a Youth Engagement Worker, meeting other young Londoners and helping them transform their lives as she has.

Having been part of the Ambassadors for London group since she was 15, which is integral to OnSide’s work in London, Leah has been able to help the charity develop a greater understanding of the needs of young people and represent them at promotional events, speaking to business leaders, policy makers and other young people about what Youth Zones will bring to London.

The Green Ribbon Campaign actually prompted me to disclose my depression and anxiety to my colleagues, friends and family for the first time.

Anastasia
Bank of England

This is Me aims to change attitudes towards mental health in the workplace by reducing the stigma, dispelling the myths and raising awareness to improve employee wellbeing.

A problem shared is a problem halved — research shows that talking openly about emotional and mental wellbeing can make a real difference, and in some cases can save lives. This is Me aims to help create inclusive cultures within organisations so that employees feel that they can be open, and recognise and seek the support they need, earlier before reaching crisis point.

How This is Me works

This is Me provides employers with the tools to change cultures around mental health.

The pioneering campaign encourages organisations to share their employees’ lived experiences about mental health through blogs, videos or other medium, a concept initiated by Barclays. Our evidence proves that storytelling is one of the most powerful tools for behaviour change, with organisations that are sharing stories making accelerated progress compared to those that are not sharing stories.

Alongside storytelling, the Green Ribbon Campaign is a visible movement for change with the inspirational message that ‘Together we can #endthestigma’.

Something as simple as a green ribbon enables employees to show their support for ending the stigma of mental health in the workplace.

In 2018, more than 200,000 ribbons were worn by employees across 300 organisations both during Mental Health Awareness week in May and throughout the year.

The third tool, Wellbeing in the City, an e-learning programme developed by Samaritans and piloted by PwC, is designed to give everyone the skills and confidence they need to support friends, families and colleagues who may be experiencing emotional distress. Bringing Samaritans expertise in ‘active listening’ to the workplace, the tool shares real life case studies from people who have both been helped and helped colleagues through difficult times

Aim for 2019

This is Me has grown substantially and by the end of the 2018 campaign had over 500 organisations involved, reaching over one million employees. 2018 saw the launch of This is Me North West and This is Me Scotland with other regions, including This is Me West Midlands, launching in 2019.

Our ambition in 2019 and beyond is to continue this growth nationwide, to reach some of those harder to reach sectors as well as the many smaller enterprises that are in the Square Mile. We will continue to support our organisations in creating mentally healthy workplaces for all.

The 2017 Thriving at Work Review, commissioned by the Prime Minister, identified that the UK is facing a mental health challenge at work that is much larger than first thought.

Not only is there a big human cost of poor mental health at work, including through loss of life, there are also knock-on impacts for families, society, the economy and Government. Employers are losing billions of pounds because employees are less productive, less effective or off sick.

Despite this, mental health still carries huge stigma in society, so much so that just 16% of employees feel able to share a mental health problem with their line manager, facing reprisal, judgement and discrimination. And the devasting truth is that a 2018 report identified that those employees who had disclosed a mental health issue, 11% were subject to disciplinary procedures, demotion or dismissal.

Watch Chris’ Story

I was broken... I desperately needed help I just didn’t know how to ask for it.

Suffering from ‘burn out’ trying to balance work and life demands, Chris, a Barclays Transformation Director, was diagnosed with stress, anxiety, sleep deprivation and was potentially days away from a stroke. She took a supported leave of absence whilst she recovered through rest and talking therapies, and returned to work five months later with a different perspective and a passion to support others in protecting their wellbeing.

Through Chris’ workplace Reach Network at Barclays, she became aware of the This is Me campaign and decided to share her story via video. The reaction was extraordinary, with over 700 responses of support from every level of the organisation. Since then she has noticed a massive shift in attitudes towards normalising mental health issues and helping remove the stigma associated with mental health conditions within the company and the City as a whole.

She now feels confident that she has the tools to manage her health pro-actively and has begun an MSc in Psychology and Diploma in Counselling to further her ambitions to work professionally supporting others.

Recognised for her support of the campaign by being nominated as Barclays Woman of the Year, she is one of the many leaders within the company making good mental health a priority.
Nicole works at the Bank of England as a case officer and has completed Samaritans’ Wellbeing in the City learning programme. It has given her the skills to look after her own wellbeing and the courage to approach colleagues who are struggling.

She has seen a noticeable impact on colleagues by simply asking them if they’re okay and encouraging them to share their feelings.

As the mother of a child on the autism spectrum, Nicole has felt empowered to ask for help and support at work. Having an understanding working environment improves her work-life balance and reduces stress, which makes her a better parent and a more productive employee.

Being able to complete the training online, in bite-sized chunks, and in privacy whilst working from home, made the whole process more accessible and enjoyable for her.

Nicole feels that the Wellbeing in the City programme supports the Bank’s goal to create a healthy physical and mental environment where staff can thrive. She also believes it has the potential to change lives.

“It was a good way of connecting to a colleague and remembering we’re all human.”

Developing the skills needed for our future

A report by the Institute for Public Policy Research has warned that there is a serious UK skills shortage.

The research shows that the UK skills system is in urgent need of reform and the workforce needs to be prepared for the challenges of Brexit, the impact of Artificial Intelligence and automation and the continued impact of globalisation. Specifically, there is a serious shortage of digital skills required by employers today.

The impact of the shortfall across the UK is huge and action is urgently needed to reach, attract and develop a wider, more diverse pool of talent.

The skills gap currently costs the UK economy £63bn per year in lost income.

Targeting the barriers contributing to the skills crisis

We will explore and develop programmes over the next 2 years which target the barriers contributing to the skills gap.

In 2018 we created She Can Be..., which aimed to open up untapped talent blocked by barriers relating to gender at a time when 10 girls to every 1 boy believe that discrimination will hold them back in their careers (Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors 2016) and 64% of 17-21 year old females believe that all being equal employers prefer to hire a man over a woman (Girlguiding Girls’ Attitudes Survey 2016).

To achieve this we partnered with Girlguiding, Hounslow Council, Nacro, The Girls’ Network and Young People Cornwall.

How She Can Be... works
The one day event is broken into two parts. Small groups of young women visit City firms in the morning to participate in interactive workplace shadowing and learn about the variety of roles in the City, how their skills are transferable to the workplace, the diversity of backgrounds of women working there and why the City wants to recruit them. They also meet Real Models – young women themselves, employed by these firms and representing a range of roles within the organisation, to whom the participants can relate.

In the afternoon, participants come together with businesses to hear from keynote speakers, share what they have learned and discuss what needs to change, ending the day by making a pledge to make a difference.

“I pledge today to keep advocating for the advancement of women in the workplace to empower women of all ages to be the best at what they do.”

Aim for 2019
2019 will be bigger and better. Now one year on, we know that 96% of 2018’s participants felt empowered to make decisions about their careers after the event, so we’re tailoring the day to highlight the transferable skills that they already have and how to acquire those that they need to become future ready.

I thought today was a really important day for showing young women that this illusion that the City is just for men is just an illusion.

96% of young women participants felt empowered to make decisions about their future careers after the event, compared to 59% before.

86% of young women participants felt they had a good understanding of the different City careers available after the event, compared with 24% before.

Neena was surprised by how many young women were interested in working in the City and the participants on the day had no idea how many young women like them work in Liberty Specialty Markets - so perceptions were changed on both sides. It’s created a community of young women who can support each other’s ambitions, as well as being supported by the participating firms.

The firm is looking at wider geographical areas for recruitment, making sure that women are represented on all recruitment panels, and have changed their maternity and paternity policies.

There’s more work to do, but She Can Be... has given them a forum with other firms where those ideas can be shaped and grow.

I was so inspired and humbled by the young women I met. If we can inspire just one of them, I’ve done my job well.”
Alaina was inspired to get involved with She Can Be... because the role models around her at school only spoke about careers in nursing and teaching. Therefore, being able to speak and demonstrate that there are so many opportunities available motivates her to continue to speak to and encourage young women like her.

This was important to Alaina because when she initially started out in the financial industry she recalls feeling overwhelmed as there was no one she could relate to. She Can Be... gave Alaina the opportunity to work with young women and demonstrate that there are people who look like them and come from different backgrounds working in the City.

Alaina felt energised speaking to so many engaged and ambitious young women who had a wide range of questions about the career opportunities available, the knowledge and skills required for specific roles, and CV writing and practical interviewing skills. Following her presentation, a number of the participants connected with her on LinkedIn to follow her career journey, thereby highlighting the ongoing impact of getting involved for both the young women and herself.

The City of London is a global leader in financial and professional services, but not everyone knows that it also invests significant sums in communities and causes to change lives and make a wider positive impact on society.

City Giving Day is a simple but impactful initiative that enables City companies and employees to celebrate and showcase their philanthropic and volunteering achievements and encourage others to get involved.

On one day in September, the City unites behind a common cause to raise money, recruit volunteers and have fun.

City Giving Day has grown year on year since it was launched in 2015. 313 companies were involved in 2018. Our aim is to inspire even more organisations to get involved in 2019, growing to 400, not only in London but in other cities around the UK.

HR Director, M&G

M&G Prudential is delighted to be a Founding Patron of The Lord Mayor’s Appeal to help create A Better City for All.

It was great to welcome in 2017 the three Lord Mayor’s Appeal charities – Samaritans, Place2Be and OnSide Youth Zones – to the family of charities that M&G Prudential supports.

Since then, the strategic focus of the Appeal on building an Inclusive, Healthy, Skilled and Fair City has given real impetus to our efforts with our own employees and our local community, particularly in destigmatising mental health issues, encouraging more diverse applicants to our industry, and helping improve financial literacy and other key skills in schools.
Danielle’s daughter — one of twin eight-year-olds, suffered from a period of severe anxiety and low self-esteem, which was affecting her relationships at school and at home. She lacked confidence, felt ugly and angry, and said she was ‘not good enough’. Fortunately, Place2Be was already at her school and she began to have weekly sessions to give her the support she needed. Danielle feared that without professional help her daughter’s emotional wellbeing would have only worsened leading to increased problems.

The sessions gave Danielle’s daughter the space to express how she was feeling and find ways to manage these emotions. She regained her confidence, her sense of fun and started to become herself again. Now she’s playing well with her sister and others again and can’t wait to start secondary school.

"I believe that if she didn’t have any help she would have had deep problems, especially transitioning to secondary school."

Being the mum of three children, managing her daughter’s distress was difficult, especially as her twin is an extrovert. She is extremely grateful for the support of Place2Be during that time.

Corporate Partnerships

Support The Lord Mayor’s Appeal as a corporate partner and together we will work to create A Better City for All.

Through our thought leadership initiatives covering Diversity and Inclusion, Mental Health and Skills development we can educate, connect and empower your workforce to be engaged agents of change in your business.

As a corporate partner your business will also support our three chosen charities and their projects to deliver real change for communities across London.

We offer our corporate partners a unique way to amplify their social and commercial impact.

With unrivalled access to the City’s leading firms and their executives, our Appeal team are experts in supporting our corporate partners to make a meaningful and lasting impact with their employees, the communities they serve and their wider stakeholders.

The partnerships we develop are also enriched by the convening power of the Lord Mayor as the head of the City of London Corporation and an influential ambassador for the UK’s financial and professional services sector.

Supporting the work of our three charities

As a corporate partner your business will directly help The Lord Mayor’s Appeal’s charity beneficiaries to realise a transformative project over three years.

Employee Engagement Opportunities

As a corporate partner of the Appeal your company will be invited to a series of City Giving Day breakfasts hosted by the Lord Mayor and supported with your City Giving Day plans.

We can also share bespoke volunteering opportunities offered by our beneficiary charities.

Thought Leadership Initiatives

As a corporate partner your business will have the opportunity to participate in The Lord Mayor’s Appeal’s thought leadership programmes, which have been developed in response to some of the most critical concerns affecting working cultures in the City.

We also provide opportunities for our partners to taking a leading role in shaping the direction of our initiatives through hosting events and participating in their exclusive Steering Groups.

Corporate Entertainment and Networking

Many of our engagement events take place at the Mansion House, which is one of the City’s most historic and beautiful buildings as well as being the official business residence for the Lord Mayor of the City of London.

As a corporate partner your business will have the opportunity to attend events at this prestigious venue in the company of the Lord Mayor of the City of London.

Many of these events are social and fundraising events that are perfect for corporate networking and client entertainment.

UBS is committed to supporting the communities within which we operate. We do this by taking a long-term approach, focussing on Education and Social Entrepreneurship, and providing both financial and human resource into local places of need. In this manner we seek to have a positive impact on the health, wellbeing and prosperity of those communities of which we are a part.

The synergies between our focused, impact driven, place based approach and the work of The Lord Mayor’s Appeal has enabled us to partner and, we believe, help collectively achieve greater impact than acting alone. Through partnering Place2Be as part of the Mental Health Campaign “This Is Me” and OnSide Youth Zones we have been delighted to thus enhance our commitment and investment in partnership with The Lord Mayor’s Appeal.

Corporate Responsibility & Community Affairs
UBS

The Lord Mayors Appeal highlights issues that are important to us and complements our commitment to philanthropy in the City.

From support of City Giving Day, to promoting World Mental Health Day and engaging our staff in important conversation about inclusion and diversity, we believe that our partnership delivers real impact for the community and for our business.

Without all your support, we could not have made the difference we have this year.

The Lord Mayors Appeal would like to thank all contributing photographers and our design partners Onthree for their ongoing support.

In particular Chris C Groves/Photography/Samaritans and Luke Rogers/Making Boom Creative/Case Study Photography.
A fantastic calendar of events

During the last Mayoral year we hosted an exciting range of fundraising events from abseils to gala dinners to golf days. 13 events took place, which were attended by over 2,000 people.

You can support our events by booking tickets, taking part or sponsorship.

Being a corporate partner of The Lord Mayor’s Appeal has elevated the way AON is perceived by clients and our wider stakeholders. I think that’s because it’s provided us with fun and meaningful ways to connect with those around us, in the communities we serve and with our colleagues day to day.

Much of this owes to the incredible charities we get to support; The Samaritans, Place 2 Be and OnSide Youth Zones. The more we get to learn about their work, the more motivated we are to support them.

Making a positive impact in this way is something that any organisation would want to be a part of. What’s especially valuable about our involvement is that the Appeal operates from the heart of the City of London. As a result it’s been fantastic at providing AON with access to areas of business we’re less familiar with and helping us discover how we can better work alongside them.

For us, we think we can connect with the Insurance industry really easily, but The Lord Mayor’s Appeal has enabled us to connect with influential figures across the wider financial services industry and learn more about their business challenges and opportunities, which crucially, we may be able to help them with.

There are many ways you can get involved and support us.

Valuing a culture of diversity and inclusion is at the heart of our business.

We are equally committed to embedding working practices that have a positive impact on the communities around us.

Through The Lord Mayor’s Appeal our people have gained insight into some of the most important conversations on diversity and inclusion which they can take into their day to day roles.

When this impact is combined with our involvement with the Appeal’s campaigns like City Giving Day or mental health awareness initiatives such as This is Me and their charity partnerships, we are more than proud to call ourselves a Founding Patron.
